Threshold mornings

The paper version

Your morning at a glance

Start on the floor.

Your body already knows what settles it: sound, water, the floor. You don't need a new routine, only a notebook where you wake. The hard-day version still counts.

Do	Don't
Bare feet	Phone first
Cool water	Perfect penmanship
Loud singing	Skipping the small version

The three lines

Copy these onto the inside cover, in your own hand. They are enough on a hard day.

Floor. Feet flat, or sit right on it. One slow breath down into your feet.

Water. Cool water over your wrists, or a sip. Clear the static.

One line. Write one line from the strips by hand, once.

When you have more time

Sound. One song, out loud. Take requests if you want to.

The wave. If a download came, write the first words that landed. Three words counts.

Thank you. Say one out loud to whoever is listening.

Today's lines

Cut along the dashes. Glue one into the front of your notebook for each morning, or keep your favourite for the week. The last two are blank for your own words.

I will always find my way back.	I feel everything, and I can stay steady while I do.
I don't have to earn rest.	My voice is allowed to be soft, and it's allowed to be heard.
I tell the truth and I don't have to over-explain it.	I choose who gets access to me.
I am a person, not a source for everyone else.	What works for me deserves to be remembered and used.
I am protected and welcomed.	I'm allowed to want more than I've been allowing.
My anger is information. I can listen to it without being run by it.	I keep the roots and I leave the rot.
Joy is allowed to be part of my work.	I am returning to myself, one wave at a time.
I do for myself what nobody did for me.	Sound is how I come home.
in my own words	in my own words

One page a week

Ten minutes, a glue stick and scraps from your adornments. Pages go at the back of the same notebook.

You'll need: scissors, a glue stick, old magazines or printed images, leftover beads or thread, a pen.

In ten minutes: gather six scraps, glue what you love, write one line across the bottom.

- ◯ Voice. The studio, HAIRŪNA, the sound of the work.
  Look for: Studio light, waveforms, a lyric line you love, the colour your sound would be.

- ◯ Adornments. Waist beads, rings, bracelets, necklaces.
  Look for: Bead colours, metal textures, a design you want to make, a real bead or bit of thread glued down.

- ◯ Hair. The locs, the care, the crown.
  Look for: Length, oils, how you want to feel when you wash it, one word for your hair.

- ◯ Home and rest. Soft light, a calm room, deep sleep.
  Look for: Lamps, linen, a quiet corner, the stillness of the house at 3 a.m.

- ◯ Roots. St. Vincent, Tortola, the water, the bush.
  Look for: Leaves, sea colours, a family name, a phrase in Vincy.

- ◯ Joy. What makes me laugh with my whole belly.
  Look for: A song that makes you dance, a face that makes you laugh, a food you love.

Tick the circle when the page is glued in.

Don't forget the things that work

Copy these onto the last page of the notebook, and add one whenever you notice it working.

- Feet flat on the floor, or sitting on it
- Cool water on my wrists, or washing dishes
- Singing out loud
- Music, then a pause
- Wall push, towel grip, yelling into a blanket
- Writing the wave back to the baseline
- A cool cloth on my daughter's legs when she's hot

On a wave page

Spark. The first words that landed.

Body. Where I felt it, and what I was doing.

Baseline. What settled, in a sentence.

Write messily. The page is for the wave, not for anyone else.

I will always find my way back.
